Neither character ever moves beyond the most childish questions of faith or horror. See the example below, on the stereotypes and everyday racism faced by a Black American living in Japan. But I do explicate, perhaps more fully than before, both the historical and conceptual reasons for regarding catastrophic mass extinction, and catastrophic mechanics in general within their limited scope of validity not as anti-selectionist per se but rather as fracturing the extrapolationist premise of Darwinian central logic, and requiring that substantial aspects of phyletic pattern be explained as interaction between temporal extensions of microevolution and different processes that only become visible and effective at higher tiers of time.
